Mark has practised in most areas of general civil litigation during his legal career, spanning over 30 years. He provides advice and representation to large self-insured public corporations in a multitude of jurisdictions, covering all manner of workplace issues including workers compensation, unfair dismissal, equal opportunity and bullying and harassment claims.

Mark has acted as file principal in numerous motor vehicle, general personal injury and statutory recovery litigation matters involving the seriously injured. His experience in this area over a lengthy period of time has placed him in an excellent position to appreciate claims which require thorough investigation and involving complex economic loss issues.

With his experience as the former National Manager of a leading Australian law firm's Quality and Business Management System, Mark brings a lateral approach to the solving of legal issues affecting his clients. That experience also ensures that Mark maintains a strong client focus and is always looking to assist clients in improving their own workplace practices.

Mark has consulted to various large statutory and public corporations in relation to claims management issues, and has been integral to many special projects undertaken in this regard, often involving the establishment of new policies and procedures to help integrate statutory changes into a claims management framework, as well as advice on the application of statutory changes to everyday claims.

Mark has spoken at many industry events, from national conferences to small industry focussed associations, on areas of special interest. He has helped develop and conduct training sessions for many clients, both internally and externally.
